Part I: Multiple choice (0.15 each = 3.0)

Eden recalled: Lioness, leopard, dog unlikely pals (Part 2)

Adapted from: <http://www.mmegi.bw/index.php?aid=57938&dir=2016/february/19>

Part I of this story is in the reading comprehension section (see page 6)

Khama usually visits the BDF animal enclosure and plays with them. Most of the predators at the BDF enclosures know him as a friend. One leopard even once scratched his face leaving the President with a bleeding cheek. The Verreynees said the President was impressed by the way the predators were relating with the dog and the vets and so Khama allowed the veterinary to keep their custody.

"When the President saw Button, Kelele and Kali playing together he said, 'Well, you had them for so long. Why don't you take custody of them?'" Marlize said. The vets jumped at the offer as they had already created a bond with the wild cats. Although the couple understands the politics of predators in captivity, they say it would be sad to see them go.

"The cats belong to the State. We are just offering them space to live and we do not profit from them. We get help from friends who help us feed them," said Erik. Erik also explained that the cats cannot be released into the wild because the lion is a pride animal and cannot live alone.

"If it was taken into the wild, other lions would most definitely kill it. Lions are territorial pride animals. Kelele has grown accustomed to getting food from humans and if released, she would immediately approach people seeking food and no one would understand her. They would kill her," explained Erik.

Every day the couple gets into the enclosure to walk the animals. During the Mmegi team visit, the dog and lion are found in happy spirits.

It is evening and the afternoon showers have cooled down the hot summer temperatures. The lively lion and dog approach the fence 'to greet us'. Kali, the leopard, is hiding in the bush apparently because she is in heat. The vets say their enclosure is bigger than the BDF's and animals can walk around more freely. The couple goes inside the enclosure after a brief talk to the lion outside the fence – it is like a request to enter by the humans.

The fierce looking big cat agrees to let them inside and play – a mini demonstration for the journalists. They, however, get in carrying big sticks.

"As much as we are used to them and they too are used to us, we can't forget that they are a lion and a leopard and they are very dangerous predators," says Erik. Erik walks slowly and is majestically followed by the dog and lion. There is boyish excitement with a tinge of nervousness on his face. His smile is just a wide grin. He makes no sudden movements. Journalists on the outside are awed and shooting pictures hoping the exhibition will not end in sad headlines of a lion showing its true nature.

Kelele the lion rolls upside down like an abnormally large dog and Marlize strokes it gently. The lion suddenly stands up attempting to jump onto Marlize the way dogs would do after enjoying a stroke.

However, Marlize is alert and dodges the lion because she says Kelele's friendly jumps on a person could leave one with deep claw wounds. And that is when Kelele decides to chase Button – the dog. Button demonstrates that she can stop the big lion by growling to her ordering her to stop, both the chase and the painful slaps of the big claws.

It is that unusual relationship of Button and Kelele that is amazing to see. The vets say they do not advertise for people to come see the animals nor do they charge anything for viewing. It is all out of love for nature in harmony.

01. After having read the article, which of the statements below should be considered not true?
- President Khama himself suggested that the couple keep the animals instead of returning them to the BDF enclosure.
 - One of the veterinaries stated that lions are too proud of themselves to live alone.
 - Although the couple is used to the predators, they don't entirely trust their nature.
 - It is possible to say after having read parts 1 and 2 of the article that this story does not take place in the US.
 - The couple does not make any money out of their animals.
02. Having read: "Journalists on the outside are awed and shooting pictures hoping the exhibition will not end in sad headlines of a lion showing its true nature." it is correct to say that:
- The press outside their house was anxiously expecting a major tragedy to take place.
 - The journalists are extremely surprised to see the affection Kali has for her human friends, however, they fear that she might not be able to control her instincts and eventually show her true nature.
 - The journalists outside are a little upset since they are not allowed to enter the enclosure and share the experience with the couple.
 - The journalists are extremely surprised at such a scene and really hope nothing bad happens to the couple.
 - The journalists are scared that the animals might escape and they might become the subject of sad headlines.
03. We can infer from the context that the following words bond, pride and dodges in the article mean respectively:
- connection – a group of lions - avoids
 - join – respect – caresses
 - promise – satisfaction - pats
 - connection – a feeling of importance - avoids
 - join – respect – pats
04. Which of the statements below is true according to the information given in the article?
- One of the vets states that the predators do not belong to the government.
 - The president visited the Verreynee's farm and decided to give them the animals they had been taking care of.
 - President Khama is most likely an animal lover. Once he even got scratched on his face by a leopard with which he used to play with.
 - The Verreynees think it is good for their children to grow up surrounded by all kinds of animals.
 - Dr Erik and Dr Marlize fear that one day the predators may not be able to fight against their nature and may end up killing them both.
05. In the sentence: "It is evening and the afternoon showers have cooled down the hot summer temperatures. The lively lion and dog approach the fence 'to greet us'..."
- "us" refers to the journalists.
 - "us" refers to the vets.
 - "us" refers to the leopard and all the other animals.
 - "us" refers to the president and his team.
 - "us" refers to the readers of the article.

Animal rights campaigners want the English language to be fairer to animals. Professor Andrew Linzey wrote in the Journal of Animal Ethics that we should change the names we give to animals. He said the word "pet" insults dogs and cats. He said instead, they should be called "companion animals". He also dislikes the word "owners" because it describes animals as being property and not living creatures. Linzey believes people will treat animals better if we use more respectful vocabulary.

06. The alternative which best reflects the ideas behind the text is:

- Merely changing words does not change the legal status of animals, but it does begin to reflect modern views and differentiate your dog from your kitchen table.
- Only humans have duties and therefore only humans have rights.
- Animal rights advocates propose that animals be viewed as persons, not property.
- Animals cannot be regarded as possessors of rights.
- How we treat our animals reflects how we treat each other.

Chimpanzees communicate through vocalizations, facial expressions, posture, touch, and movement. Studies show that a young chimp is able to make as many as 34 different calls, and the facial musculature can express a wide range of emotions. The animals show great intelligence in problem solving and the use of simple tools, such as a stripped twig used to draw termites from their nests. A number of experiments have shown that chimps can even learn to use sign language or other languages based on pictures or symbols. _____.

07. Choose the best alternative to complete the blank:

- Chimpanzees form loosely organized bands of 2 to 80 individuals on fairly large home ranges
- Except between mother and young, little permanency exists in individual relationships
- Conservation efforts that prohibit the hunting and sale of chimpanzees provide some protection; however, these bans are difficult to enforce
- However, critics maintain that this does not constitute an understanding or use of words
- The brain of a chimpanzee is about half the size of the human brain

08. From the cartoon we can infer that:

- Dorothy doesn't care what her parents think.
- Dorothy is only interested in earning money.
- The boy isn't Dorothy's boyfriend.
- Dorothy will make profit no matter what the opinions are.
- Dorothy's parents are stunned with the boy's appearance.

Part II: Reading Comprehension (2.0)

Eden recalled: Lioness, leopard, dog unlikely pals (Part 1)

From a quiet neighborhood in Mokolodi, Staff Writers THALEFANG CHARLES and PAULINE DIKUELO discover an unusual animal friendship of a lion, a dog and a leopard living in one enclosure. This is the living story of Kelele the lion, Button the dog and Kali the leopard. No myth.

Button and Kelele pic: taken by Thalefang Charles

One of the first things one notices when walking into the Mmegi newsroom is a framed copy of the September 20, 2013 Mmegi edition whose front page read: "Wena? O rua tau wena?"

The story was about government's brash refusal to let Leganang Mutanzi, a Gumare farmer, capture some terror lions and tame them. The story became political when it surfaced that the same government had however offered then cabinet minister, Christiaan de Graaff, the right to keep lions at his leisure. The story later unfolded to the canned hunting of the lions and this piled pressure until government finally changed their policy towards predators in captivity by banning the practice. So, naturally, when a lead came through of a couple rearing a lion on the outskirts of Gaborone, a Mmegi news team rushed out to investigate.

Southwest of Gaborone on the western foot of Kgale Hill in the small village of Mokolodi, the Mmegi team enquired from school pupils who were walking playfully from school, "Ko Taung ke kae?" (Where is the lion's place?).

The pupils excitedly chorused the directions of the place – the Verreyne's place. Every dweller in the village knew the place.

In front of the locked gate of the huge yard protected by a high security electric fence, we were welcomed by the barking of two Jack Russells and two rather intimidating bull mastiffs – with their deep growling barks.

The owners, veterinarian couple Dr Marlize Verreynee and Dr Erik Verreynee, take over and chase away the bull mastiffs before unlocking the gates to let us in. After introductions – and welcome licks from the Jack Russells – the friendly couple shares the story of how they live with five dogs, 10 cats, a lion and a leopard in their backyard.

A paradisiac set up at its best. But interest is obviously on the wild predators – the lion and the leopard. The veterinarians said they got custody of the wild cats in 2012 from the Department of Wildlife and Botswana Defence Force (BDF) after being asked to treat and take care of them for some time.

The small leopard was found abandoned next to the road near the border. It was five-weeks old then and was an angry and distressed little wild cat looking for its mother. Marlize says they were asked to look after it for some months by authorities from the wildlife department. The lion was born at the BDF wild animals enclosure in Mogoditshane. Marlice says immediately after the cub was born, it turned into a bone of contention between two adult female lions also at the enclosure.

"The cub was taken away from its mother by the other lioness and a fight between the lionesses ensued for the little cub. The soldiers managed to dig under the fence and take away the little cub and that is when we were asked if we could look after it for some time while the BDF prepared a new cage for the new mother and her cub," said Marlice.

The couple happily agreed and provided a haven to the cub. Their house was temporarily turned into a loud, wild kindergarten of predators. The Verreynees raised the lioness and leopard like domesticated cats. They named the lioness Kelele (noisy in Swahili language) because, they say, 'she was such a noisy cub'.

The leopard was the fiery one. "She was always spitting and snarling so we gave her the name 'Kali – the fiery one'," said Marlice.

At home they had a small puppy that they named Button. Button was the same age as Kelele - the lion, but they were both two months younger than Kali - the leopard. The three animals lived, played and grew up together. "Button didn't know that she was a dog or Kelele a lion," explained Marlice. Eight months into custody of the animals they were asked to return them to the BDF enclosure and they obliged. Marlice still remembers the fateful day.

He said: "It happened that on the day we got to the BDF, it was a Monday, we coincidentally met President Ian Khama at the enclosure". (to be continued...)

U.S. Continues to Deport Central American Migrants

The New York Times – by Julia Preston – March 9, 2016

http://www.nytimes.com/2016/03/10/us/us-continues-to-deport-central-american-migrants.html?_r=0

Since late January, the immigration authorities _____ (01.arrest) 336 migrants from Central America for deportation, part of a continuing operation to toughen border enforcement, Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said Wednesday.

Most of the people detained were youths who _____ (02. cross) the border in the last two years without their parents and who _____ (03. turn) 18, but did not win asylum or another legal status and were ordered deported by immigration courts. After migrants turn 18, they _____ (04.lose) some protections given to minors who arrived without their parents.

The Obama administration _____ (05. move) ahead with deportations of migrants fleeing from three violence-racked countries in Central America, despite a furor among refugee advocates, Latino groups and Democratic lawmakers after about 120 migrants _____ (06. arrest) and targeted for deportation in a roundup in early January.

Mr. Johnson has said, at times defiantly, that the deportations are necessary to maintain border security and curb illegal crossings. In a statement on Wednesday, he said he had ordered "Operation Border Guardian," which _____ (07. begin) on Jan. 23, to continue the arrests and expulsions.

Since Oct. 1, a total of 28,808 people apprehended at the border _____ (08. send) back to Central America on repatriation flights, officials said, and 128,000 Mexicans were returned to their country. "We must and will enforce the law in accordance with our enforcement priorities," Mr. Johnson said.

The deportations in January caused widespread alarm in immigrant communities. More than 100 senators and House representatives, almost all Democrats, wrote to President Obama demanding an end to the raids. The contenders for the Democratic presidential nomination, Hillary Clinton and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, also denounced the raids and pledged to end them if elected. Most of the migrants arrested in early January _____ (09. be) women and their children. Fewer than half of them, including young children, _____ (10. represent) by lawyers in their asylum cases in court, records showed.
